² Though The Government Management Reform Act of 1994 requires the Financial Report of the United States Government to be completed no later than March 31st for the previous fiscal year, the December deadline in OMB Circular A-136 (issued June 2009) supersedes that law.
